exhibition

Bettina Speckner jewellery

11.12.10-29.01.11

Bettina Speckner is an expert in fascinating you with her jewellery, in which photography plays a major role. Old portraits, particularly ferrographs, as well as her own images of objects, tranquil landscapes and architecture are enriched and alienated by the addition of various other materials.

Thanks to the Goethe Institute a leporello has been produced depicting both the front and the back of a number of brooches. Seeing, knowing and remembering come together in these miniature treasures.

Caroline Slotte plates

11.12.10-29.01.11

Caroline Slotte's work is also about intimacy and recall, but then using old ceramics as material. The link with the past and the use in family circles of such pottery creates a poetry which is heightened by the artist's intense, layered and concentrated execution.

announcement

The Nederlands Zilvermuseum (Dutch Silver Museum) in Schoonhoven is showing 'Pièces de Milieu. Table Still Lifes' by Gésine Hackenberg, which runs from 11 December 2010 to 13 February 2011. The exhibition is the direct result of the first Stokroos Grant for contemporary silver and the featured pieces will become part of the museum's modern silver collection. Galerie Ra will be showcasing similar still lifes at the Frame (Munich) and Collect (London) trade fairs next March and May respectively. (foto: Harold Strak)

new talent

Wouter Groenendijk graduated from Arnhem Academy of Visual Arts, among others, with this set of pitchers made from specially coated cardboard. This sculptural ensemble, which alludes to human poses, will be on show at Galerie Ra in the coming months.

new to the collection

Caviar necklace by Susanne Klemm. Each link of this grey anthracite, polyolefin necklace opens, thus enabling it to be worn in various ways. (foto: Harold Strak)
